

THE LANGENFELD FOUNDATION

The Langenfeld Foundation (through its Wounded Warrior Outreach) is privileged to announce an event designed to say "Thank you" to all disabled veterans. We can never really thank our men and women in the armed services enough. But, as a symbol to demonstrate how much we respect and honor them all, we are making a very big show of gratitude toward one of their own.

We will be taking a veteran, wounded in Iraq, on a trip of a lifetime: a safari hunt in South Africa. We hope that this gesture of our appreciation will express the deep admiration we have for all those that have made such great sacrifices for our country.

Mike Mills, of Freeport, Minnesota, had already retired after putting in his 20 years of service with the Army. But when America went to war against terrorists in Iraq, he felt his country needed him again. He reenlisted, and was soon on his way to Baghdad—where his life would be changed forever.

He was gravely wounded in a roadside bomb attack. (His truck exploded, he was soaked in fuel and burned until his colleagues could put out his flames.) Mike survived, but suffered deep tissue burns over 31% of his body. He lost fingers, muscles, ears, nose, and a lot of skin. Now after some 37 surgeries, Mike has returned to living an independent, "normal" life.

To honor disabled veterans, The Langenfeld Foundation (in partnership with Minnesota SCI) are taking Mike to South Africa. He will be hunting courtesy of a donation by Zeekoepan Safaris. Joining Mike on this trip will be his 20-year old son Aaron, as well as a professional cameraman. This trip will be featured on a nationally broadcast show, called "The Industry" TV, aired on "The Sportsmen Channel."

If you, or others you know, would like to join us in saying "Thank you" to Mike and all disabled veterans, please consider making a contribution. This is a great opportunity to honor America's finest, and a chance to give something back.

Sincerely,
